Ghana and Britain focuses on intercultural exchange

Vice President Alhaji Aliu Mahama on Thursday joined the visiting Deputy British Prime Minister, Mr John Prescott, to kick-start a three-million pound cultural relations programme between Ghana and Britain that would span three years.

Dubbed: Africa 2007: A Celebration Of Culture and Identity is the brainchild of the British Council that would focus on identity and culture, education, intercultural exchange and dialogue among 11 African countries and the UK.

The three link themes of the programme: Creative Celebrations, Different Lives and Footprints would engage young people, professionals, musicians and artists from various backgrounds in exchange and other interactive events.

Vice President Mahama said the multilateral programme would offer the opportunity to young people from Africa and the UK to interact and learn from each other and foster greater mutual understanding. I applaud the British Council for its steadfast work in Ghana and the rest of Africa and on this occasion for its bold and wise decision to focus most of its Africa 2007 programme on young people, the future of any nation.

He said these international exchanges would enable the beneficiaries to contribute to a foundation in their lives that would enable them to make positive contributions in the future to their communities, countries and in an increasingly interconnected world to the global community.

Mr Prescott acknowledged the significance of Ghana's Golden Jubilee celebrations this year, which he said symbolised the first country in Africa to break from European colonisation.

He said 2007 would mark the 200th anniversary of the Abolition of the Slave Trade Act passed in the UK. Mr Prescott said the programme was linked to many activities planned in the UK; Bristol, Hull, Liverpool and London, all of which have strong historical links with the slave trade and were marking the abolition of the slave trade.

On March 25, Reflections, part of the Africa 2007, would be stage at Elmina Castle, a UNESCO World Heritage Site.

Mr Prescott said the event would be broadcasted to cities in the UK, linking audiences and artists in commemoration. He said his official interaction with children in Ghana had revealed that they were very bright to uphold the development of the country.

Mr Prescott lauded as brilliant, a question a pupil asked him about the future of school children in Zimbabwe. He acclaimed Ghana as the "Black Star" of Africa that was still leading the way in the fight against slavery, poverty and underdevelopment.

Mr Moses Anibaba, Director of British Council, Ghana, said the bicentenary of the Act of Parliament to abolish the slave trade across the then British empire ushered in a new beginning: "A beginning of the reversal of one of the most brutal and inhuman enterprises ever known to man."

"In Africa, the past does matter. It explains the present and no nation can move forward without it."

Mr Anibaba said Africa 2007 hoped to demystify and challenge age-old perceptions that Africa is forever dependent on the UK and the West for its success and future. Source:

The latest on the Ching Chong Song controversy at Bryn...

The latest on the Ching Chong Song controversy at Bryn Mawr College... As I mentioned here the other day, the school recently canceled the band Ching Chong Song's scheduled campus performance. (Because, you know, the name.) Band member Julia LaMendola wrote to the school's paper to whine and point fingers about the show's cancelation: Ching Chong Song Treated Unfairly. This caused all sorts of trouble. Here's a response from the paper's managing editor on why she decided to run LaMendola's offensive letter: Ching Chong, this Witch Is Dead. For the most part, I have to agree with her. How else would we know that the Ching Chong Song lady is a raving crazy? The paper's editorial board also chimed in: On Letters to the Editor. Meanwhile, the school's Office of Intercultural Affairs also responded to the letter: Office of Intercultural Affairs Responds to LaMendola. And here's a good one from a student: Ching Chong Song Letter Shows Ignorance. Don't mess with Bryn Mawr, and don't be coming around there with your Ching Chong Song. Bryn Mawr don't play that.

UPDATE: The fight against Ching Chong Song continues... I received this a little too late (I'm working on Pacific Standard Time), but Ching Chong Song was apparently scheduled to perform tonight at New York University, opening for Jeffrey Lewis & the Jargonauts. Organizers of NYU's Asian Heritage Month, as well as other concerned groups, were planning on staging a peaceful protest this evening outside the event. I hope it went well...

Offer Opinion ; Internet Opinion Group Dark Fiber: Tracking Critical Internet Culture by Geert Lovink, According to media critic Geert Lovink, the Internet is being closed off by corporations and governments intent on creating a business and information environment free of dissent. Calling himself a radical media pragmatist, Lovink envisions an Internet culture that goes beyond the engineering culture that spawned it to bring humanities, user groups, social movements, nongovernmental organizations (NGOs), artists, and cultural critics into the core of Internet development. In "Dark Fiber, Lovink combines aesthetic and ethical concerns and issues of navigation and usability without ever losing sight of the cultural and economic agendas of those who control hardware, software, content, design, and delivery. He examines the unwarranted faith of the cyber-libertarians in the ability of market forces to create a decentralized, accessible communication system. He studies the inner dynamics of hackers' groups, Internet activists, and artists, seeking to understand the social laws of online life. Finally, he calls for the injection of political and economic competence into the community of freedom-loving cyber-citizens, to wrest the Internet from corporate and state control. The topics include the erosion of email, bandwidth for all, the rise and fall of dot-com mania, techno-mysticism, sustainable social networks, the fight for a public Internet time standard, the strategies of Internet activists, mailing list culture, and collaborative text filtering. Stressing the importance of intercultural collaboration, Lovink includes reports from Albania, where NGOs and artists use new media to combat the country's poverty and isolation; from Taiwan, where the September 1999 earthquake highlighted the cultural politics of the Internet; and from Delhi, where a new media center explores free software, public access, and Hindi interfaces. ### How to or Not Spend Your Free Time

I. am. so. effing. bored.

I have no idea why this blog gets updated when I have so much free time. Or rather, I suppose I donâ€™t have actually have a lot of free time, I just donâ€™t do any of my work. Next week is my last week of the term and I have a large test on every day in Japanese. Seriously. Why? Why do this do this every term? I have a chapter test on monday, a large project that was assigned this week due on tuesday, movie and sakubun tests on wednesday, interview on thursday, and then the final exam itself on Friday. I guess I should be happy a week from today I will be completely done, right? Right? Well, seeing as I am free for now and no one wants to do ANYTHING I am expecting I really long and depressing break. Whenever I try and get people up and out they are always like oh we canâ€™t but then plans always get made and stuff gets done and it generally doesnâ€™t involve me. I stopped really thinking about it or caring about it too much, and I donâ€™t know if people do it consciously or not, but people get so offended if I ever bring it up, so I just donâ€™t, and donâ€™t really think about it except when Iâ€™m alone, like now.

We had to do group projects in my Intercultural Communication course and one group did a website on how to spend your free time at ICU. I probably should have read it. Goodness I am tired. What else, what elseâ€”!

I donâ€™t much to say, but I suppose I am going to update this at least every other day to get back in the habit. So if anyone is even actually reading this, keep with me~
