Wood Watch ; Wood Craft Shop Crafting Tradition: The Making and Marketing of Oaxacan Wood Carvings by Michael Chibnik, "It is hard for me to praise this book sufficiently. . . . It is a major contribution to the field of Oaxacan/Mexican studies, as well as economic anthropology and the study of tourism and crafts."--Arthur Murphy, Georgia State University, coauthor of Social Inequality in Oaxaca: A History of Resistance and Change Since the mid-1980s, whimsical, brightly colored wood carvings from the Mexican state of Oaxaca have found their way into gift shops and private homes across the United States and Europe, as Western consumers seek to connect with the authenticity and tradition represented by indigenous folk arts. Ironically, however, the Oaxacan wood carvings are not a traditional folk art. Invented in the mid-twentieth century by non-Indian Mexican artisans for the tourist market, their appeal flows as much from intercultural miscommunication as from their intrinsic artistic merit. In this beautifully illustrated book, Michael Chibnik offers the first in-depth look at the international trade in Oaxacan wood carvings, including their history, production, marketing, and cultural representations. Drawing on interviews he conducted in the carving communities and among wholesalers, retailers, and consumers, he follows the entire production and consumption cycle, from the harvesting of copal wood to the final purchase of the finished piece. Along the way, he describes how and why this "invented tradition" has been promoted as a "Zapotec Indian" craft and explores its similarities with other local crafts with longer histories. He also fully discusses the effects on local communities of participating in the global market, concluding that the trade in Oaxacan wood carvings is an almost paradigmatic case study of globalization. Wood Watch Wood as a medium - As a contemporary artistic medium, wood is used in traditional and modern styles, and is an excellent medium for new art. Wood is used in forms of sculpture, craft, and decoration including chip carving, wood burning, and marquetry. Wood engraving - Wood engraving is, simply, the craft, or technique, of engraving, using the medium of wood. This was the earliest type of engraving. Guild - A guild is an association of people of the same trade or pursuits (with a similar skill or craft), formed to protect mutual interests and maintain standards of morality or conduct. Historically they were formed to benefit societies or small business associations, also referred to as a trade union of sorts, since each crafter was a self-employed individual artisan or part of a small craft shop or co-operative. Straw marquetry - Straw marquetry is a craft very similar to that of wood marquetry except that straw replaces the wood veneer. It is thought to have first been practised in the east; examples were brought to England in the 17th century. woodcraftshop you favorite Kingston these 'noughties' to the intermediate woodworker about choosing the right machine for your workshop, and the Snug Tiers, five kilometres (3.1 miles) south of Kingston in Tasmania. Yet Still, the Journey Lunges Forward

After spending all that time traveling half-way around the world, what have you learned? Now, back in my temporary home in North Carolina, I lean back in my armchair and contemplate this important inquiry that I am so often confronted with since returning back to the US.

Trying to come up with some coherent response to this seemingly overwhelming and complex question, my head drifts back, eyes shut, and I think back to the past eight months on the road. All that comes to my mind, however, is a slide-show of warm and welcoming faces from the innumerable wonderful friends that I've had the pleasure to cross paths with on this trip.

Many differences are quickly apparent among this unceasing stream of people: different beliefs and customs, different languages, different forms of self-expression, different temperaments and personalities. I could go on and on with listing off the dissimilarities, but in sum, all of the differences are trumped by a unifying commonality: humanity.

Going back to our original conundrum, "What has traveling taught me?"

Through traveling and coming into contact with so many different types of people, I now better understand how similar in fact we all are. Through traveling, I have learned that we are all different peas stemming from the same pod, often with similar hang-ups, aspirations, fears and desires. Traveling has taught me to expand that circle of brotherhood, encapsulating not just immediate family and friends, not just the members of our town or the citizenry of a US or Europe for that matter, but rather that of all of humanity. In short, traveling has taught me to be human. It seems to me that the failure to grasp this simple notion "treating others as human beings" is at the heart of much of the misunderstanding, aggression, and strife that has plagued humanity throughout time.

Traveling has also taught me to not take life too seriously but at the same time stand back mouth ajar and awe-stricken by its miraculousness; to take whatever Lady Fate throws your way, run with it and never look back; to not just complain about all that's wrong with the world today, but firstly to look at all the unifying themes, and to create your own culture if the prevailing one doesn't quite suit you. Most of all, traveling has taught me to seize every waking moment as an opportunity "an opportunity to learn, to grow, and most of all, to live.

By no means am I saying that traveling is a pre-requisite to the understanding of these traveler credos that I've put forth. Like the writer Dagobert D. Runes once said "People travel to faraway places to watch, in fascination, the kind of people they ignore at home". Traveling with an inquisitive and open mind does, however, surely facilitates this process and fosters its development.

Probably not to the readers' surprise, it has been an objective of mine to pique an interest of the audience in traveling and intercultural exchange through my entries. Many of us live in a society, the US, where only around 10% of us have passports, and due to a lack of intercultural understanding, a lot of us have dangerous isolationist and non-cooperative views of the world.

This is obviously an important topic, but a more central message for me that I've tried to convey, rather than generating an interest in just traveling, however, is to generate an interest in decisive action. If that decision towards action comes to fruition in deciding to quit your job or stop doing whatever you're doing to make that extended traveling trip that you've always dreamed of, then power to you. But that's just a tiny example of a much broader theme in that of taking command of the life that we live.

To me, it seems as though so many people live lives of mediocrity, burdened by an overhanging fear of failure preventing us from taking action to better position ourselves for the life that we desire. The mighty word "failure" plagues us, leaving us in a paralyzed "what if" mindset, questioning our past decisions or better yet lack of "and striving for certitude in our existences.

This deep-seeded fear of failure is a direct impediment to interpersonal growth and is one of the main reasons that as a species we're so terrified of change and uncertainty. But if we really grasp the truism that failure is a mental construct "an internal representation of the world around us in that we create" and in reality there are just outcomes in which we can always learn something from, then what's stopping us from leaving in the dust this life of mediocrity and achieving greatness?

We have all the tools right in front of us to forge greatness in each of our lives, however you may decide to define it; the problem lies in our obliviousness to the enormity of our potential power: specifically the grave misunderstanding of the procession of change which is at the heart of this human plight. The human mind has a lot of difficulty grappling with the inherent non-linearity and asymmetry of the nature of change, and as such we are often fooled into thinking that the energy involved in invoking change should be roughly equal with that of the outputs or its effects. This view of change, besides for simply being incorrect, also fosters a mentality of complacency and passiveness in action, as well as creating a nihilistic view of the world in which we are all just powerless and static beings.

Fact of the matter is we are not creatures living in isolated vacuums, often tiny inputs inevitably will have huge far-reaching effects, and our actions do have an immediate impact not only on our lives but throughout our intricately webbed world and its history. Change often begets more change, and the mere decision to act reflexively changes us thereby further affecting the outcome. Now understanding this concept of change, the decision that confronts us is not whether or not we want to change the world "we inevitably are and will just by living in it and acting"we rather must decide on the magnitude and direction of our affect.

Hereâ€™s a personal example highlighting the far-reaching implications of decisive action in creating change. About four years ago or so, I decided for whatever reason to stop watching TV and to start reading everything that I felt would give me a better understanding of the world and that which would aid in making me a more evolved person. This was a pretty big commitment for me, because only a few years before that, in the middle of my sophomore year in college, I had just finished reading my very first proper book from front to back. Before that point, I just breezed through my education, doing the bare minimum necessary to do well enough, and I was able to manage to do that without ever fully reading any of the assigned novels. Fast forward to today, where Iâ€™ve embraced a philosophy of change and its conduciveness towards growth. My decisions to go to graduate school in Spain, to head off into my travels through Asia, to start up this website; all these actions are manifestations of a philosophy that I have come to understand through the synthesis of ideas put forth by other writers interacting with my ever-changing experiences. As I am quite certain that my life would not have panned out the way it did without immersing myself in books, that decision made four years ago set my life on a completely different trajectory. Additionally, the life trajectories of many of the people that Iâ€™ve encountered throughout the past few years have all been altered to some degree all as a direct result of that one decision that I made four years ago, while these same people will alter the life trajectories of many others indirectly through me, and those others affecting more and more others, and so on ad infinitum.

The point of this little anecdote is not to soothe any megalomaniac desires on my part, but rather to show the extraordinary effect we can, and often inevitably will have, on ourselves, our immediate surrounds, and even the entirety of the world, through our decisive action. At any given time we can choose whether to be active or passive players in this game of life; we can choose how and how much of an effect we will have; we can choose the immortal imprints that we leave upon this world.Â The first step is just the decision to take action and the direction that you would like to take it, the rest is all just a continual re-writing of the history books. Through our actions we can reach the plains of immortality.

InÂ a similarÂ spirit, even though this will be the last entry that I write for TND (for now at least), hopefully some of the ideas that I talk about, ideas which where borne in countless other thinkersâ€™ ideas, may continue living on. I hope that you, the reader, gained just a fraction of the satisfaction from this website as did I.

Tillâ€™ the next time down this windy road of life,

Tim

As some readers know, just before Thanksgiving, Exbiblio was forced to take a step back and re-assess the project and plan for the company. To avoid crashing and burning financially, a number of great employees had to be let go and it was a hard time both for those leaving and the few staying. Uncertainty permeated the office, but there remained a belief in the product and hopefulness for its success.

Since the project was able to continue, a few key hires have joined Exbiblio.

Ruth Hoffman joined the office in the fall as a personal assistant to Martin King, but quickly became involved with Exbiblioâ€™s first night of introductions to The Snow Leopard Trust. Since then, she has become an integral part of event planning, cataloguing and running the library, decorating, organizing and purchasing for the office, and is a great conversationalist on everything from movies to art, travel to suggested reading. Ruth has a BS in Sociology and a Masters of Intercultural Management, and has traveled the world working with development organizations including The Peace Corps and Grameen Foundation. She spends part of her time in Seattle and the rest at her home in Vermont.

Mathew Chasan was hired as a software engineer at the beginning of February. He joins Exbiblio most recently from a SCUBA Diva Master and Instructor Training expedition in Honduras. Mathew received his Computer Engineering degree in Computer Engineering from the University of Washington and gained software and firmware engineering experience here in the Northwest. His extremely upbeat attitude, knowledge of music and daily new suggestions for improving Exbiblio have been a very welcome addition. Demi Raven came to Exbiblio shortly after Mathew, who introduced Demi to our project. In addition to his UW degree in Computer Science, Demi also majored in fine arts in Colorado and is a visual artist, recently exhibiting at the Smithsonian National Portrait Gallery and most currently was showing at the Aron Packer Gallery here in Pioneer Square. Demi brings a zen-like quality to Exbiblio with his mild manner and seemingly perpetual patience. He and Mathew also spent a weekend making their shared office the most inviting environment in which one could spend a workday.
