Fuller Seminary Lecture Series Focuses on Children at Risk

"Children and the Mission of God" was the theme of a lecture series offered at Fuller Theological Seminary in early November. The problem of children at risk is becoming an increasingly important area of emphasis at the seminary. "A major, growing thrust of our school is a global engagement with children at risk: AIDS orphans, inner city youth, the street children of the world," said Doug McConnell, dean of Fuller's School of Intercultural Studies. "We're examining what we can do--in partnership with the church -- to care for children, protect them, offer them justice, and present them with the life-saving message of the gospel." ### Todd Wong, Intercultural Activist - article posted on Suite 101

Todd Wong, Intercultural Activist - article posted on Suite 101 On September 22nd, 2005, a simple e-mail arrived. ; It read:Dear Todd,

Apparently the owner has had her architect apply for demolition and rebuilding of the House of Obasan. (Please see below.)

Any ideas about what to do?

Six e-mails later that day, Ann-Marie Metten and I had written a press release for re-launching the "Save Kogawa House" campaign. ; We had contacted important organizations and individuals in the community. ; And the Globe & Mail's Alexandra Gill had committed to an announcement for Saturday's issue. We met in person the following evening at the Asian Canadian Writer's Workshop / Ricepaper Magazine 10th Anniversary dinner, which was honouring Joy Kogawa with a Community Builder's award.

Ann-Marie and I have become friends, working together on the Kogawa House campaign, together with Anton Wagner in Toronto. ; Eight months after the initial e-mail, Kogawa House was purchased by The Land Conservancy of BC and preserved for generations to come.

Here are Highlights of Kogawa House campaign.

Below is an article that Ann-Marie has written about me for the activist website: Suite 101

Todd

Wong encourages tolerance and acceptance by blurring the borders between seemingly polar opposites--the Scottish and Chinese cultures

On

St. Andrew's Day, November 30, 5th generation Chinese-Canadian Todd Wong donned his kilt and sporran to join others of Scots descent to celebrate the patron saint of Scotland. "Toddish McWong," as he is affectionately known, honours Canada's Scottish descent when he raises a toast to St. Andrew, whose bones were carried for protection to the farthest reaches of the world now known as Scotland.

Later in the season, Todd and his Chinese-Canadian family and friends will continue a longstanding tradition of blending cultural traditions in Todd's annual Gung Haggis Fat Choy dinner. Scheduled for the Sunday evening between Robbie Burns Day on January 27 and Chinese New Year, which falls on the second new moon after winter solstice, Todd's dinner brings together musical performances from both Scottish and Asian communities. Wontons and spring rolls made with haggis and other dishes that merge Scottish and Chinese traditional foods fill the 10-course menu. More than 500 people are expected to participate in the 2007 Gung Haggis dinner on Sunday, January 28....

Grace College: Gospel and Culture

I made the drive out to Grace College today to teach a class on Christianity and culture/ministry to young adults. Jeremy, one of my former youth ministry students was in the class and I had him take a few pics for me (bottom).

To kick off the discussion we talked about why the young adult generation is leaving the church. I made the parallel, taking creative license, of course, that the young adults that are leaving the church are like the prodigal son, taking the inheritance and taking off and the modern church, at times, can play the part of the older brother, disgusted with the younger brother's lifestyle and refusing to party at the return. But the father's stance is still the same, eagerly waiting.

Basically, the problem is two-fold: we have young adults that have grown up in the church that are leaving, and we have the population of unchurched young adults, both combined are roughly 29% of the pop. The answer to the problem: we need to do the tough work of communicating the gospel to culture outside the church walls and in.

One thing I've been doing the last few places I've spoke is to ask students to write out a question that they've wanted to ask about church or mission or ministry, but they've been afraid to ask. I have them turn in anonymous questions and we go through them at the end. I didn't have much time left so it was more of a rapid fire. Here are a few.

*How much should you ask for in a salary?

*Why do so many old people not like change?

*How do you find a ministry that fits?

*How is youth ministry different in cities, intercultural settings and overseas?

*Why is the church so divided?

*What do you do to combat feeling alone?

*Why do so many churches have college-age adults but no ministry for them? It's like they just don't care or are afraid to?

Many good questions, so little time. Thanks to TK and the class for letting me be their guest for a day. Enjoyed it.
