Cidne W.'s Review Of In and Out Burger (5/5)

Is there not one In and Out Burger that is never busy? It is another one of those common bonds of Southern California humanity; an intercultural glue, a lovely delicacy that everyone goes for. An In and Out visit puts you on the map of cool. When I shop in the area, I make sure to stop for an In and Out burger. It is my shopping treat, like when I was "good" as a kid and got a treat for not embarrassing my mother in the store. Now my inner child says... "I only got three pair of shoes today, I've been good." Then I go and get my cheeseburger extra well done with everything.

It is so back-in-the-day kinda good, burnt-cow-on-a-bun kinda good, get-in-my-belly! kinda-good. The chocolate shakes are super thick. The fries, though authentic and fresh, get cold pretty quick but are a must have if you are going to eat the burger. The red and white palm tree decor is cute and inviting and there is always an interesting mix of people eating inside this location; couples, friends, groups, families, single shoppers like me. The festive season makes it something special to see on an ordinary day, especially with Anita Baker crooning a jazzy rendition of "God Rest Ye Merry Gentleman" in the i-Pod. The staff here, comprised of young people are not as slack as in some other places as they have to work their asses off to keep up. No time for that fucked-up teen-angst bullshit. Those Double-Double orders are coming in fast and furious!

I generally get my order with shoes on it so that I can devour it at home with complete abandon. A few bites and it is gone, the fries have long gone as cold as the chocolate shake. I'm left feeling pretty satisfied and well rewarded. I retreat to try on shoes. The taste of onion lingers as I vow to be good so that I can get another burger, or two, during the shopping season.

Have a cool yule!
